

Dear colleagues,

I proposed to the Education Department of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), based in Paris, a cooperation (voluntary) with the main networks of Experiential Learning.

This Department publishes highly influential reports on the research and evaluation of education systems and innovations in developed countries. Example : Report « PISA »

Would you be interested, either individually or on behalf of an association of training organizations, in this "cross-fertilization"? If so, please specify:

- the contact person in a network "Experiential Learning"
- the link with the most interesting study, in your opinion, on the results of our pedagogical approach, notably on the themes of certification of "tomorrow's competences" (personal and social), the development of creativity, critical thinking, self-confidence
- the most interesting examples of programs developing, notably on the same themes

Sincerely,

Alain Kerjean

Founder of the Experiential Learning movement in France (1987), author of several books on the subject.

https://fr.wikipedia.org/wiki/Alain_Kerjean

--